Richard Alden Bean : Fly Fishing Southern California's Lakes Streams before purchasing it in order to gage whether or not it would be worth my time, and all praised Fly Fishing Southern California's Lakes Streams:

Ever wanted to fling a fly for largemouth bass in the Colorado River? How about for striped bass in, say, Irvine Lake, or for trout in the San Gabriel River? "Fly Fishing Southern California's Lakes Streams" will help you take full advantage of the surprisingly wide range of angling opportunities offered in Southern California. This handy guidebook covers more than 70 waters, describing the best times to fish them, preferred flies and tactics, and angling tips from experts -- just the sort of detail that lets adventurous fly fishers find good sport within a two-hour drive of any town in the Southland.

About the Author Richard Alden Bean, a native Californian and a fly fisher for more than thirty years, has written for a number of outdoors publications, and is the "Warmwater Fly Fisher" columnist for California Fly Fisher magazine. He has also authored several books on automotive and motorcycle repair. His interests outside of angling include astronomy, bird watching, and archery.
